

You chose the weapon you're currently wielding because:

- a. It has the greatest potential for POWERRRR
- b. It is a standard and law-abiding weapon, reliable in all situations
- c. It is the best for taking advantage of opportune moments
- d. It smashes things standing in my way

You need to cross a narrow bridge currently being guarded by a 'Black Knight.' How do you approach this obstacle?

- a. Challenge the Black Knight to a duel to death
- b. Invite the Black Knight to join your quest, using reason and honorable incentives to persuade him.
- c. Sneak up on him and assassinate him; there is no such thing as an unfair advantage!
- d. Snipe him (with whatever means) from far away; if he chases, he's no longer blocking the bridge, and if he doesn't, you'll just keep sniping!

You find your way blocked by a locked door. You...

- a. Look for the key in logical places
- b. Pick the lock
- c. Kick it or knock it down
- d. Knock nicely?

You've been persuaded to give a loan to a friend of a friend. You...

- a. Write up a contract, recording all the terms and the signatures of all parties
- b. Make it known you expect to be repaid, but keep the terms flexible
- c. Charged interest
- d. Don't care about the exact amount; they just owe you a favor later

Your family disapproves of your significant other because of philosophical/religious/family feud reasons. You...

- a. Keep your silence, evade their questions, and don't really care what they think
- b. Go back and forth to try to explain get both sides to compromise
- c. Respect your family's wishes and break off your relationship
- d. Openly and defiantly declare your love for your significant other and publicly propose marriage

Do you respect the laws and the authorities of your community?

- a. Yes, unerringly!
- b. Yes, rules are necessary for society to function, even though you know power corrupts and some people take advantage of the rules
- c. If it suits you to; there are some laws you can't agree with and/or cannot respect
- d. You have a problem with authority and/or you break rules to break them

What is the best use of excess wealth?

- a. There is no such thing; use it to obtain more wealth
- b. Help the less fortunate
- c. Use it to prevent others from obtaining similar wealth
- d. Spend it on yourself, your family, and/or friends

A beggar approaches you. You...

- a. Give generously
- b. Give your spare change; you wouldn't miss it

- c. Try to avoid him and ignore him when you pass him
- d. Throw him an insult as you pass

If your wizard friend taught you how to fool merchants into thinking copper pieces were gold pieces, you would...

- a. Use it whenever you can, but don't go out of your way to buy things you wouldn't normally want
- b. Cheat only the rich merchants and/or when buying something expensive
- c. Never use it. That's dishonest!
- d. Use it to turn a huge profit and screw over everyone else

You see a thief in the process of lifting something from a shop. You...

- a. Shrug and say nothing. Not your shop, not your problem
- b. Tell the shopkeeper on your way out and let him handle it himself
- c. Call out the thief loudly, and steal something in the ensuing confusion
- d. Sternly confront the thief and dissuade him from his dishonorable ways

A very good friend is being picked on, and it looks like it may come to blows. You...

- a. Let him handle it on his own. It's not your problem and you don't want to deprive your friend the dignity of standing up for himself, but you'll stay nearby to scrape your friend off the road afterwards
- b. Quickly look for an authority figure to break up the fight
- c. Stand up for your friend yourself, knowing you'll likely get beat up with him
- d. Wait until it comes to blows before sneaking up and knocking out the aggressors from behind

The local gang catches an acquaintance in a loop of crime and blackmail. You...

- a. It's really not your problem. It's his problem for being so stupid.
- b. Gain the help of the local authorities; you know them well so they'll go easy on your acquaintance in exchange for busting the big fish.
- c. Pretend to be part of that gang and send your new 'flunky' to his next task.
- d. Give the guy some help under the table, but nothing that would attract attention to you.

You for whatever reason are imprisoned in a relatively low security dungeon. When you make your escape, you...

- a. What do you mean? Until your name is cleared and you're given permission, you won't leave
- b. Kill everyone on your way out. Serves them right for messing with you!
- c. Your escape is most important; the guards you had to harm knew the risks when they signed up for the task
- d. Go out of your way not to kill anyone; only minor wounds in the few cases when force was unavoidable.

Whilst browsing a crowded pottery shop, you accidentally knock over and chip the top of a small vase. No one notices for the moment. You...

- a. Go to the shopkeeper and offer to pay for your blunder
- b. Quickly and surreptitiously leave the vicinity
- c. Blame it on someone else and pocket another trinket while the shopkeeper argues with the confused customer
- d. Innocently point out the flaw to the shopkeeper and negotiate a sizeable discount

A drunken person starts loudly insulting your date, clearly as a challenge to you. You...

- a. Ignore them and urge your date away. You don't lower yourself to a fool's level
- b. Inevitably end up in a fight with them, you'll make sure of it

- c. Laugh at them and throw insults back, expecting everyone to join in on your smarter non-intoxicated quips
- d. Intimidate and reason with them into apologizing

You find out someone you consider a close friend has betrayed a secret you entrusted only to them. You...

- a. Give them harsh words but ultimately forgive them; if they mess up their second chance, you'll cross that bridge if you get to it
- b. Eventually imply that you're over it and remain friends on the surface, but never trust them again, and subtly discourage your other friends from confiding in this person
- c. No longer consider them a close friend. Or even a regular friend.
- d. Leak their secrets and see how they like it. Smear their reputation while you're at it.

Kindness...

- a. Is silly and weak
- b. Makes you feel good about yourself if it conveniences you to practice it
- c. Is one of the most important values to uphold society
- d. Is useful for karma and favors

Your good friend is caught doing something for which you know he is guilty, and as a witness you are asked to make a statement. You...

- a. Bend the truth so you maintain your honorable reputation but your friend gets a lighter punishment
- b. Refuse to make a statement at all
- c. Lie, knowing this would allow your friend to escape punishment
- d. Tell the complete truth; your friend has to take responsibility for his actions

You catch a thief in your yard, but discover that none of his pilfered items are yours. You...

- a. Let him go for a small bribe. You mainly want to avoid trouble but it's nice to be compensated for your silence too.
- b. Negotiate a large bribe; the price of your silence is high and you know he'll pay it
- c. Turn him and all his pilfered items to the authorities
- d. Turn him in but demand a huge reward for your aid in his capture

You consider the needs of the community...

- a. To be of utmost importance
- b. What? No you don't
- c. An opportunity to exploit for your benefit
- d. If it's convenient to after your own needs have been met

Your city is hit by a famine. You...

- a. Steal what is necessary for yourself (and maybe people important to you)
- b. Share what you can spare with others
- c. Steal as often as you can and sell the excess to the hungry for profit
- d. Set up a rationing system within the community

When it comes to promises...

- a. Your word is your bond; you never go back on them
- b. You avoid making promises; you only make them when you're doubly sure you can keep them at minimal inconvenience to yourself

- c. You value them as dearly as the person you made them to; you never break a promise to someone close to you, but have no qualms breaking them to others
- d. You make them when it suits you to and break them if it suits you to; they're only words in the end

You commit a crime, for whatever reason. You...

- a. Turn yourself in and make a full confession
- b. Hide your involvement. If you're accused, you'll demand the accusers to obtain proof
- c. Pin it on someone else, knowing with your false testament that the innocent person will take the fall for you
- d. Make the proper bribes to ensure your success in case you are ever accused